William Gizara, Public Affairs Manager, will present the 109th’s unique mission, touching on the logistical support and science performed in polar regions. Arctic tourist Golibersuch gives the next 2 sessions, covering Arctic geography, history, culture and art. The Constitutional Imagination  12:30 to 2:30 PM
This course will explore questions of how world constitutions come to be and are interpreted and how they both reflect and impact cultural and political life. Union Professor Daniel Mosquera will introduce the course and explore how constitutional reforms in Bolivia, Uruguay and Colombia provide legal frameworks from which to achieve sweeping environmental policy modifications and from which society can experiment with new models of political life. Union Professor Bradley Hays will discuss the ideological and constitutive tensions between revolutionary creativity and democratic veneration, drawing on the writings of Jefferson and Madison and making connections between contemporary U.S. political problems and our constitutional regime. Union Lecturer Anastasia Pease will compare the human rights provisions in the post-Soviet constitutions of Poland, Kazakhstan, Ukraine, Kyrgyzstan, Lithuania and the Republic of Georgia and the extent of each country’s success in living up to its constitutional ideals. Union Professor Stephen Schmidt will address how Israel, which has no constitution, operates on the basis of a Parliamentary Sovereignty whose Basic Laws represent compromises that may no longer be viable, due to changes in the relative influence of various secular and religious groups. Benjamin Pomerance, Esq. will discuss different U.S. Supreme Court Justices’ interpretive principles of the U.S. Constitution and the impact of each of these judicial philosophies.
Coordinator: Linda Doyle

Contemporary China: Politics, Economics and Culture  9:30 to 11:30 AM
Union Associate Professor Zhen Zhang will present “An Anthro-geographical Introduction,” an overview of contemporary China that explores the drastic changes in every realm of Chinese society and China’s relations with the wider world during the last four decades. Union Associate Professor Mark Dallas will examine the structure of Chinese government and how it affects policy-making and policy implementation. Included will be the meaning of a Leninist “Party-State,” the interaction between local governments in China and Beijing, the promotion of Chinese government officials and a short TED talk on the Communist Party as “responsive authoritarianism.” Professor Dallas’ second lecture will turn to China’s market reforms and international integration since 1979. Covered will be the successful reform of state socialism, China’s integration into the global economy and the complex interaction in US-China ties. Union Associate Professor Megan Ferry will discuss gender and sexuality in modern China. Recent economic developments in China have re-constituted sex/gender differences as well as income and wealth disparity. This talk will examine the century-long history of women’s emancipation and gender equality in China. She will discuss what gender roles have changed and what has stayed the same in society. Union Assistant Professor Sheri Lullo will explore currents in the visual arts in China. through the 1990s and 2000s. She will examine various meanings of the term "Contemporary Chinese Art" by looking at new artistic media, a variety of visual responses to the past and increasing globalization and the Chinese artists' participation in the current transnational contemporary art.

Ancient Cities

12:30 to 2:30 PM

This course will cover broadly the topic of ancient cities. Union Professor Peter Bedford will discuss Babylon, arguably the most famous city in ancient Mesopotamia/Iraq. It is best known as the home of King Hammurabi, credited with one of the earliest law-codes around 1750 B.C. and as the capital of the Neo-Babylonian Empire. Union Professor Hans-Friedrich Mueller will address law and religion in the ancient city. Although we tend to think of law and religion as separate spheres, their intersections in ancient Greek and Roman cities were many and the divisions between them often hard to distinguish. Together they gave shape to civic organization in politics, the performance of public festivals, the ownership and transfer of property, the punishment of crime, and more. Union Visiting Assistant Professor Kassandra Miller will explore how inhabitants of ancient cities measured the passage of years, months, days and hours. She will discuss the range of timekeeping instruments and systems that the ancients used. Union Professor Stacie Raucci will give an account of daily life in the ancient cities of Rome, Ostia and Pompeii, examining urban infrastructure as well as the experiences of people of different ages, classes and genders. Union Visiting Assistant Professor Angela Commoto, a professional archaeologist, will explore the archaeology of ancient urbanism. Archaeologists are using new techniques such as aerial photogrammetry, laser scanning and remote sensing to “unearth” ancient cities without ever lifting a shovel. Join a team of archaeologists as they investigate an ancient Greek city on the Aegean Sea, examine how it was built and try to figure out why it was ultimately abandoned.

Music Styles Through the Centuries

9:30 to 11:30 AM

In this course, Union Professor Emeritus Josef Schmee will cover grand masterpieces from several centuries. We begin with the “Marian Vespers of 1610” by Claudio Monteverdi, a piece whose purpose and early performances are not well known, but one that, thanks to musicians like John Elliot Gardiner, has been acclaimed and revered. We also review the French baroque opera “Armide” by Jean Baptiste Lully whose standing at the French court was high enough for Louis XIV to appear on stage as – what else – the sun. What should symphonies sound like after Beethoven? Franz Schubert’s answer was his “Great C Major Symphony.” He never heard it. Robert Schumann found it and Felix Mendelssohn performed it for the first time. Similarly, Johannes Brahms wrote “A German Requiem” well before he wrote any of his symphonies. Not a religious man, he extracted biblical texts for a distinctly humanistic message. Finally, what would 20th century music be without the “Rite of Spring” by Igor Stravinsky. A fairly short piece, it caused a scandal at the first performance and made Stravinsky famous.

American Folk Music/American History

12:30 to 2:30 PM

From "Amazing Grace" to "Blowin' in the Wind" Americans have composed and sung songs about what mattered in their lives. We will survey some of their favorite folk songs and some less known works, to trace the relationship of songs to peoples’ lives. We will examine the historical context from which the songs emerged, what lyrics can tell us about the past and how songs have evolved over time. Themes of the songs may include family, war, religion, work and the labor movement, railroads and transportation, migration, and "hard times and hard men."

Professor Emeritus Robert Wells has taught American History at Union since 1960. He accompanies himself on guitar while singing the folk songs.
